By leave, Senator Parsons introduced the following resolutions on the death of President Don Campbell :

WHEREAS, Death, who loves a shining mark, has taken from the official circle of this Senate chamber its ranking member and presiding officer ;

Resolved, That we bow to this edict of fate—more potent than the enactments of kings or human senates—because irrepealable, and when pronounced, unavertable.

Resolved, That in presence of the symbols of a power, which but awaits its own hour to call each remaining Senator to that bourne to which three of our official circle have already preceded us, we feel the impotence of vaunted human power and glory, the uncertainty of the frail tenure to life, and the necessity of the exercise and cultivation of human sympathy and charity toward each other in both our official and personal relations as Senators and men.

Resolved, That as we feel deeply the loss of a personal friend and a presiding officer, whose gentle manners and rigid impartiality had
